

With Great Thanks & Much Excitement

Today I arose to a really nice morning. Sunshine streaming in my windows, cool temperature but not frigid, birds signing, the Mafia chasing chipmunks in the back yard, not too many eye crusties – just really a great Sunday morning. I, however, could not linger – I was on a mission. Yes today I was going to test my grit on the Internet. I was launching into a brave new world. I was going to use the World Wide Web to teach people about living better. I was going to do my very first radio show.

What topic you ask? Urban homesteading - the concept of getting to most out of where you are. From making your own biscuits to recycling cans as seed pots. The ideas put forth in homesteading can save you money, relieve your stress level, getting you closer to your environment, help you live within your means, and may be even save the planet.

I have been through just about every stage of homesteading from living a total unsustainable suburbia apartment to living off the grid and foraging for food. I will tell you right now that neither of the extremes were right for me. However, now that I have reached my middle age and am very happy with me and who I am I have decided to see how far I can go “home” without discomfort to myself and others. I will share my journey on Blog Talk Radio Urban Homesteading every week at 11:00am Sunday mornings and through my web site www.missadixon.com. I am very excited about the opportunity to share what I know with others who are like minded.

I would like to thank my friends/family for their continued support. Mark came on the show today and helped me get over those first few minutes of jitters. He spoke beautifully about his washing experience. Then Lori, maybe my best friend, talked about money and gave me ten more show ideas. Lastly, I would like to thank Allan, whose interesting method of support is sometimes just what I need – now pull my leg.

For a first show we VERY did well. I can't wait till the next time.
